Biblical Images in Literature edited by Roland Bartel with James S. Ackerman and Thayer S. Warshaw
The forty-one articles in this outstanding book reveal and discuss the biblical allusions made in literary composition (poetry, drama, and fiction) by numerous American and contemporary authors. The finely polished product of a five-year summer study program, it analyzes the use of biblical imagery in works by Melville, Twain, Eliot, Vonnegut, and MacLeish among others. A part of The Bible in Literature Courses series. Paper, $9.95

The Word and the Words
by Colin Morris
In an important book, in an eloquent manner, Colin Morris defends the power and unique stature of the sermon. Without demeaning experiments in creative worship, he reaffirms its qualities and defends it deftly, seriously, and sometimes humorously with the inspirational zeal of the evangelist and the reason of the intellectual. Paper, $3.95

Elijah Speaks Today
The Long Road into Naboth's Vineyard
by G. Gerald Harrop
By focusing on the Old Testament stories of Elijah, Dr. Harrop illustrates how careful Bible study can result in relevant use of imaginative history, drama and sermon. By analyzing Ahab's attempt to seize Naboth's vineyard, he underlines the righteousness of God as well as every man's right to his own property. It also includes a one-act play which replaces the original characters with modern-day counterparts. Paper, $4.95
